Terror at home

The aim: Mass casualties in an urban centre.
The timing: The next 72 hours.
The message: 'Oh Canada... today is the day you experience what it's like to be targeted for your belief, insha'Allah.'

An intense nationwide "race against the clock" after a tip from the FBI about a would-be terrorist led the RCMP to fatally confront Aaron Driver on a quiet street in Strathroy, Ont.

When it was all over, the terror suspect had detonated an explosive device he was carrying, wounding a cab driver, before being shot dead in a volley by a police sharpshooter.

It's not clear if the explosion or police bullets killed the 24-year-old, if he died instantly or later in the hospital. His target is still unknown. But the RCMP says its operation halted what was to be a "dreadful" terror operation certain to kill many others. Senior RCMP brass told the chilling tale Thursday at an Ottawa news conference of an assailant "clearly in the final stages of an attack using a homemade explosive device."

But so many questions remain.

Was this a successful security operation hailed by Prime Minister Justin Trudeau that, as RCMP deputy commissioner Mike Cabana said, prevented the loss of many more lives?

Or was it a failure of court orders — that prosecutors had agreed to hoping to restrict Driver's terrorist ambitions — and of Canadian security agencies who had to rely on the Americans for the intelligence that thwarted a plot?

Three parallel investigations are now going on: An OPP-led probe into the police role in Drivers' death; a national security investigation into Driver's actions — the RCMP said there's no evidence of any accomplices, though investigators are looking at what ties Driver had to a London home as well — and a separate RCMP investigation into the explosive materials Driver acquired and intended to use.

One of the dominant questions: How did a man under a restrictive court order obtain bomb-making materials and communicate — to someone, somewhere — a threatening video. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Sweating it out at home

As the Mercury climbs in Toronto — and the city drags its feet on regulating how hot it can get in apartments — thousands are living in sweltering conditions. Metro met up with three of them Friday as the temperature topped out at 31 C to measure the heat in their units and hear how they're coping.

Much of her focus during the heat wave has been on her cat Marlowe.

"We've been putting ice cubes in his water," she said of pet. "We do what we call 'frozen blanket,' where we put a dish towel in the freezer and drape it across his body."

Joyce grew up in the Caribbean, but still finds the heat in her bedroom, at the top of an Annex house she shares with two roommates, "a bit much."

"It's not like there's an ocean I can jump into," she said with a laugh.

The trio "thought they could survive the summer" without air conditioning, Joyce said, but the latest heat wave is putting them to the test.

To cool down, she takes a warm shower because "it's supposed to be cooler when you get out." Or, she just lies in front of a fan.

And, as for being around other people: "It's too hot to date," she said. "Too hot to touch anyone."

When Metro tested the temperature inside Dunlop's apartment on the seventh floor of a building near Bloor and Sherbourne, the thermometer beeped with a fever warning.

Dunlop said he and his wife have had lots of trouble sleeping as the temperature climbs.

To beat the heat, they try to keep cold water running in the bathroom.

On a scale of 1 to 10, the heat is "pretty much 80 to 100," he said.

Dunlop added: "And that's with both of us pretty much in our skivvies."

What it takes to buy a home these days

REAL ESTATE

Young people really are being priced out of the market

It takes a six-figure household income to afford a home in the Greater Toronto Area. The exceptions are a couple of pockets of Durham where, if you're earning a little less than $100,000 a year, you can still find a starter nest.

A study being published Friday by real estate brokerage TheRedpin shows that the average required to buy a home, anything from a condo apartment to a detached house, is $124,153, including the income needed for property taxes and utilities.

If your household income is $76,057, you can still get a rung on the property ladder but you're probably looking at a neighbourhood like Brock near Lake Simcoe. It's at least 90 minutes from Toronto but it had the lowest selling price in the region the first half of the year, averaging $373,269.

It's easy to see why first-time buyers in particular fear being priced out of the market, said Tarik Gidamy, TheRedPin's broker of record.

"Not many people have the chance, especially Gen Y and the newer generation, to amass a deposit that would qualify for today's average home price," he said.

TheRedpin study averaged home prices based on the Toronto Real Estate Board statistics and factored in utility costs and taxes. The average selling prices include every type of home — detached, semis, townhomes and condos.

The study assumed an average 20-per-cent down payment, an interest rate of 2.49 per cent and a 25-year amortization. Property taxes were calculated on a per-municipality basis.

The study found that purchasers eyeing detached houses, semis or townhomes need 17 per cent more income to buy this year than they did last year as area home prices continue to climb faster than most people's earnings.

Apartment condo purchasers needed an additional 6 per cent. The highest average home prices were in York Region, where King Township homes averaged $1.208 million between January and July, and in Richmond Hill, which showed a $1.066-million average price in the same period.

"The average Canadian who has an average job is getting driven out of those markets completely," said Gidamy, who added the area is especially attractive to foreign and move-up buyers, who have equity from a previous home and some additional income.

TRAGEDY

Community creates memorial for family

Almost a year after a drunk driver claimed the lives of three young children and their grandfather, community members will gather to remember a family's tragic loss.

Close to 1,000 people are expected Sunday in King City's Wellesley Park to commemorate Daniel, Harry, and Milly Neville-Lake, and their grandfather Gary Neville, who were killed last September in a horrific car crash in Vaughan.

The event will unveil a permanent memorial in honour of the children and their grandfather, and serve as an expression of support to parents Jennifer and Edward Neville-Lake, said event organizer Jennifer Waxman Stallman.

The Neville-Lakes lost all three of their children in the collision, Daniel, 9, Harrison, 5, and Milly, 2, and Jennifer's father Gary Neville, 65.

Stallman, who runs the parent blog and Facebook page Entertain Kids on a Dime says she was compelled to help the family immediately after reading about the tragedy.

"I felt like I needed some way to help support them," she said. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Late ex-mayor Rob Ford smoking crack cocaine in that infamous video. CONTRIBUTED

Ford crack video released at last

OPINION

At this point, what is the point?

TORY'S TORONTO

Matt Elliott

It's here.

The video that, three years ago, caused Toronto city hall to descend into chaos. The one that forced throngs of reporters, desperate for comment, to set up camp outside the mayor's office. The one that prompted a confused gaggle of international media to attend city council meetings. The one that so many were desperate to see.

It's the Rob Ford crack video — and I don't care.

I watched it yesterday, soon after its release following the conclusion of a court case against the late mayor's driver Alexander "Sandro" Lisi, and didn't feel vindication or satisfaction.

Instead, I felt nothing.

The video provides no closure and no new information. It doesn't tell us anything we did not already know. Unless you were one of the unhinged few who bought into the notion that this was always some kind of media-driven anti-Ford conspiracy, there's little to gain from seeing it.

In fact, about the only thing the existence of this artifact from a strange time does is risk distracting us from the pressing issues facing our city now.

Because while, sure, Toronto city hall is no longer beset by lurid headlines and chaotic scenes, there are still so many critical issues in front of us.

There's Mayor John Tory's push to cut city budgets by 2.6 per cent across the board, a move that's raised the alarm with TTC CEO Andy Byford and riders frustrated with poor service.

There's chief planner Jennifer Keesmaat's bold proposal to build a 21-acre park above the downtown rail corridor. It's a mega-project that could define a legacy, but also comes with huge political and financial risk.

There's the ongoing attempt to reform the Toronto Police, both with their budget and with the way they interact with marginalized communities.

And there's the transformation of public housing. There's the implementation of the city's anti-poverty strategy. There's the push to invest in the city's tree canopy, both to fight climate change and to stop random tree branches from falling on people. There's the need for true accessibility, affordable child care and a funded road safety plan that makes it so pedestrians stop getting run over by jerks in cars.

It's a long list. And it keeps getting longer.

Together, these kinds of issues represent Toronto's future.

Rob Ford, again in the spotlight as we gawk at a sad cell phone video, represents our past.

I do not want to look back.

PARKING TICKET

Man charged with mischief after police vehicle damaged

A Toronto man has been charged with mischief after he allegedly damaged a police vehicle after receiving a parking ticket Sunday afternoon, police say.

Police say they received a call at around 3:54 p.m. for a suspect who was reportedly seen damaging the driver's-side mirror of a Toronto Police Service Parking Enforcement vehicle in the Cherry St. and Unwin Ave. area.

Prior to the incident, police say the suspect had been issued a parking infraction for parking his vehicle in a non-designated area. In this encounter, police say the suspect had been uncivil towards the officer.

Shortly after the infraction was issued, police say the officer parked his vehicle a short distance away and began to patrol the area on foot. The suspect then returned and caused approximately $1,000 damage to the vehicle.

The suspect then fled the scene but was apprehended by police a short distance away.

Abolfazl Nasri, 38, of Toronto, has been charged with mischief under $5,000, police say.

He is scheduled to appear in court on Sept. 13.

Vandal uses nut butter

PUBLIC SAFETY

Parents find risky allergen smeared on play equipment

Someone is totally nuts.

Concerned parents in the west end were sharing an allergy warning across social media groups on Wednesday afternoon after discovering the Dufferin Grove Park play structure covered in peanut butter.

"It was everywhere. All over the hand railings . . . on the ladder, all over the swings, all over the slides," said Sarah Bolton, who was at the park with her son Lewis, 2, at around 9:30 a.m. on Wednesday when she noticed the mess.

> All the parents were freaking out.
> Vanessa Crossley

"It's just a really scary situation. It would have to take a sociopath to do something like this," said Bolton, who also alerted a few neighbourhood groups on Facebook.

"You shouldn't have to worry that someone will maliciously put a very (well)-known allergen (in a place) that kids will play."

The news then spread quickly on Facebook.

"Only a psychopath would do such a heinous thing!" said one commenter. "What kind of an evil person does this?"

According to Eat Right Ontario, an allergic reaction can happen within minutes or up to several hours after contact with peanuts and symptoms vary from person to person. The most serious form of the allergy is called anaphylaxis, which can be life threatening and requires immediate attention.

"(It's) hard to predict how much peanut would trigger the reaction, so we always warn parents that small amounts could trigger it," said Dr. Edmond Chan, the division head of the allergy clinic at the BC Children's Hospital.

The Dufferin Grove Park incident is believed to be the fourth in west end parks in the past few months. Parks staff received reports of peanut butter in Carleton Park, Perth Square and Hillcrest Park via 311, but in each instance, "staff could not locate any peanut butter when they arrived at the park," said Matthew Cutler, a spokesperson for Toronto Parks, Forestry and Recreation.

Any vandalism of playgrounds is a concern for the City, said Cutler, adding the Toronto Police Service would be responsible for investigating this issue.

Vanessa Crossley, in Dufferin Grove Park with her 2-year-old son Eli, Thursday. said the smearing scares her, even though her son doesn't have a peanut allergy.

"It's terrifying," she said, "and it's just bizarre that somebody would do that."

URBAN PLANNING

Citizens' rears at forefront of research

Luke Simcoe
Metro | Toronto

Where do you like to sit?

That's the question being asked by #SitTO, a group of young, urban-minded Torontonians pushing for better public seating in the city.

Earlier this summer, the group staged a "sit-in" downtown, bringing portable chairs to places that lacked seating. Now, they've partnered with the Martin Institute of Prosperity at the University of Toronto to build a crowdsourced map of the best – and worst – places to park your butt in the city.

"Through crowdsourcing, we hope we can bring a lot more attention to the issue," said group member Jonah Letovsky.

The map launched Thursday, and the group is asking people to post photos of public seating they like, as well as locations where more seating is needed.

"If there are certain places that Torontonians feel strongly about, they'll show up on the map and that becomes a tool for politicians and policy-makers to make change," Letovsky said.

Letovsky said the renovated space outside Union Station is an area that needs more seating. But he applauded the Four Seasons Hotel in Yorkville for adding movable chairs to its public plaza.

"Studies have shown people like to make public spaces slightly their own. Even if it's just moving a chair a few inches, it's amazing how many more people will use those chairs than cast in stone benches," he said.

While the number of benches in the city may seem like a trivial issue compared to affordable housing or transit, Letovsky said the way the city approaches sitting says a lot about its attitude towards public space.

"As we densify, people will use the public realm as their backyard and they need to feel welcome there," he said..

Showdown cast in doubt

Questions remain over efficacy of peace bond and Canadian intelligence

The FBI "came into possession" of a two-minute video by a black-hooded, masked, unknown assailant, said Cabana. The Americans transmitted the video and a photo to the Canadians around 8:30 a.m. Wednesday.

"Oh Canada, you received many warnings," said the balaclava-clad figure in the video. "You were told many times what will become of those who fight against the Islamic State. You watched as your allies in Europe and America had their bullets and bombs returned back to them. You saw bodies of the filthy French laying in their own streets."

The RCMP's tactical analysts and CSIS scanned massive amounts of data against the grim video and photo — likely using software that can scan facial and voice patterns — and the whereabouts of terror sympathizers on Canadian watch lists.

By 11 a.m. the RCMP-led integrated security team thought it had a match: Aaron Daniel Driver.

Terrorism suspect Aaron Driver was killed in a confrontation with police in Strathroy, Ont.
JOHN WOODS/THE CANADIAN PRESS

Driver was already under a judge-ordered peace bond with strict conditions meant to limit his movements, travel, internet communications and cell use.

Amarnath Amarasingam, a prominent researcher on Islamic extremists in Canada, who tracked Driver's activity online and through interviews and email exchanges, prepared a court report after Driver's arrest last year. He concluded that although "definitely radicalized," Driver appeared to have a "nuanced view" of whether violence against civilians could be justified.

> We thirst for your blood.
> Aaron Driver, in a video Mounties received from FBI

Amarasingam said he never believed Driver would become an actual threat to the public. "I was definitely worried about him, but he struck me as someone was sort of engaged intellectually (with radical Islam)," he said.

Amarasingam speculated that it's possible the peace bond, in cutting him off from his newfound online community of like-minded extremists, actually served to further alienate and destabilize him. "It's possible that him being plugged in was actually a tempering force," he said.

On Thursday, Cabana refused to speculate on Driver's mental health, but he did talk about peace bonds — a legal tool RCMP use when they haven't enough evidence that is admissible in a court to charge and convict.

"As it's clearly being demonstrated by this case here, when individuals have these kinds of intentions ... there are no conditions that can be put in place that will prevent them from taking action." TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Timeline of a plot thwarted

A timeline in the case of Aaron Driver, suspected of planning terrorist activities who was killed in a confrontation with RCMP:

1. Feb. 2: Driver's lawyer and the Crown agree to a peace bond. The bond acknowledges there are "reasonable grounds to fear that he may participate, contribute directly or indirectly in the activity of a terrorist group." Driver takes up residence in Strathroy, Ont.
2. 8:30 a.m., Wednesday: RCMP receive a tip from the FBI, which found a martyrdom video made by someone "clearly in the final stages of planning an attack using homemade explosive devices." The attack was supposed to take place imminently, targeting an urban centre during rush hour. RCMP identify 24-year-old Driver as the suspect several hours later.
3. 4 p.m., Wednesday: RCMP say Driver is seen getting into a cab at a home in Strathroy. Police swarmed the vehicle. They say Driver detonates a device in the back of the cab. Driver dies during the altercation with police. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Study asks if Neanderthals fell victim to lack of jackets

Jen St. Denis
Metro | Vancouver

Did Neanderthals die out because their human competitors were better fashion designers?

A recent study of a database of animal bones found at several sites across Europe shows that Neanderthals probably weren't making close-fitting winter clothing like parkas, and it could be a significant factor in the species' decline.

"Twenty years ago there was a big debate around whether early humans evolved from Neanderthals or whether they were people who migrated to Europe from Africa," said Mark Collard, an archaeology professor at Simon Fraser University who led the study.

The bones Collard and his team analyzed were between 40,000 and 25,000 years old.

The prehistoric Neanderthal man "N," left, with Wilma, another reconstruction of a homo neanderthalensis, at the Neanderthal museum in Mettmann, Germany in March 2009.
MARTIN MEISSNER/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

"There is a consensus now that there was a wave of migration of humans out of Africa, through the Middle East and into Europe."

Archaeologists are now trying to figure out which differences between humans and Neanderthals led to one species thriving and the other becoming extinct.

The bones Collard and his team analyzed were between 40,000 and 25,000 years old, a period leading up to the last ice age when the climate would have been changing to be colder and drier. The researchers found that there were many more animal bones from wolverines, rabbits and foxes in the human sites compared to Neanderthal sites.

While some of the animals may have been used for food only, the composition of animal bones makes Collard fairly confident that humans were making winter clothing while Neanderthals were not. For instance, it's known that people living in the Arctic commonly used wolverine pelts to make the ruff of a parka: the combination of long and short hairs make it less likely the fur will become frozen around the wearer's face.

The research gives credence to a previous hypothesis that while humans were making specialized winter clothing, Neanderthals only wore fur cloaks. Being able to make parkas would have given humans an edge over Neanderthals in being able to hunt for longer periods and in colder weather, Collard said.

It shouldn't be assumed that Neanderthals weren't making winter clothing because they were less intelligent than humans, Collard said. It could have been a cultural difference: there are examples of human populations who live in harsh climates without making or wearing much protective clothing.

Heels spark newest transit complaint

Emma Jackson
Metro | Ottawa

Ottawa's public transportation system, OC Transpo, is looking into its second dress code complaint in a week, after a customer was called out for wearing high heels Thursday morning.

Shaunette Simon said she had to run for the bus because it was hidden behind a long queue of buses. It was pulling out to leave before reaching the actual stop, Simon said.

The driver did let her on, but according to Simon the driver rolled his eyes, "looked me up and down," and said, "'if you weren't wearing high heels, you'd be able to run for the bus.'"

Simon was "taken aback" and embarrassed in front of her fellow passengers.

"I was like, 'Where do you get off telling me what is appropriate attire for me to be going to work in?'" Simon said. "I wear heels every day. Why am I running for the bus other than you're not at the stop?"

She filed a formal complaint, which OC Transpo's assistant general manager Troy Charter said staff will investigate.

It's the second time this week drivers in the city have been caught commenting on customers' clothing. An 18-year-old was kicked off an Ottawa bus last Sunday after the driver said her crop top and jogging pants were "vulgar." OC Transpo doesn't have a customer dress code — nor should it, transportation manager John Manconi stressed earlier this week.

Trump entertains idea he could lose

U.S. ELECTION

Republican nominee takes a more humble approach

I meant (Obama is) the founder of ISIS. I do.
Donald Trump

Straying from his trademark bravado, Donald Trump acknowledged Thursday that his presidential campaign is facing challenges and could ultimately fall short — a rare expression of humility by the Republican presidential nominee.

Trump's most explicit concession came as he pleaded for support at a gathering of evangelical ministers, where Trump observed he was "having a tremendous problem in Utah."

The same day, the billionaire celebrity acknowledged that his lack of political correctness could cost him the election if Americans reject his blunt approach.

"We're having a problem," Trump told the ministers, adding that the next president could get to nominate up to five high court justices. "It could cost us the Supreme Court."

After trouncing 16 challengers in the Republican primary, Trump is encountering worrying signs as his campaign moves into the general election. Democrat Hillary Clinton's lead over Trump in national polls has widened in recent days, while a number of fellow Republicans have declared they won't support their own party's presidential nominee.

Trump's self-awareness was a marked departure from his usual tenor on the campaign trail.

On Thursday, Trump cited a poll that actually showed him a few points behind Clinton and arguing the race between them was close. Asked by CNBC how he planned to reverse the advantage that Clinton has, Trump said he simply planned to do "the same thing I'm doing right now."

"At the end, it's either going to work, or I'm going to, you know, I'm going to have a very, very nice, long vacation," Trump said.

Earlier this week Trump caused a major stir with comments about the Second Amendment that were perceived as advocating violence against Clinton, and found himself facing questions yet again after declaring Wednesday that President Barack Obama was the "founder" of Daesh — a claim that's patently false.

He brushed off conservative radio commentator Hugh Hewitt's attempt to reframe Trump's observation as one that said Obama's foreign policy created the conditions in Iraq and Syria that allowed Daesh to thrive.

"No, I meant he's the founder of ISIS. I do," Trump said, using another acronym for the extremist group. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SCIENCE

Shark now oldest vertebrate

In the cold waters of the Arctic, a denizen of the deep lurked for centuries. Now scientists calculate that this female Greenland shark was the Earth's oldest living animal with a backbone.

They estimated that the grey shark, part of the species named after Greenland, was born in the icy waters roughly 400 years ago, and died only recently. That conclusion puts the entire species at the top of the longevity list.

Using a novel dating technique, an international team of biologists and physicists estimated the age of 28 dead female Greenland sharks based on tissue in their eyes. Eight of the sharks were probably 200 years or older and two likely date back more than three centuries, according to a study published Thursday in the journal Science.

Until now, that record holder was a bowhead.

Wildfires strike southern France

NATURE

Burnt vehicles following a fire in Vitrolles, southern France, on Thursday, which devastated 3,300 hectares. AFP/GETTY IMAGES

Firefighters in southern France brought in reinforcements from across the country on Thursday to help smother the last flames and douse dry brush after wind-whipped wildfires devastated thousands of acres and destroyed homes but spared Marseille, the nation's second-largest city.

There was no letup in the high southern winds, known as the Mistral, raising the risk of new bursts of flames after the worst blaze in years was contained.

Meanwhile, a fire broke out Thursday in the Pyrenees-Orientales region, southwest of Marseille.

Multiple fires started up on Wednesday, west and north of Marseille, and President Francois Hollande said some were of criminal origin.

"We will find those who started them," he said.

A man behaving suspiciously in Vitrolles, one of the towns most ravaged by flames, was detained for questioning, according to French media.

Fires were burning in Portugal and Spain. Two arrests were made in the deadliest of more than 100 fires in Portugal, on the island of Madeira, that killed three people.

French Interior Minister Bernard Cazeneuve said four people were seriously injured — a resident of the Marseille region and three firemen who battled a blaze on Wednesday in the nearby Herault region. More than 3,000 hectares of vegetation were destroyed in the Marseille area, the Herault and the Pyrenees-Orientales regions.

"Today, at this time, the fire is, as we say, mastered. That means that it is not expanding any more there are no visible flames," said Vice-Admiral Charles-Henri Garrier. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ELEPHANT EXTINCTION?

Patricia Sims, the Canadian co-founder of World Elephant Day, is marking the event's fifth anniversary with the debut of her documentary film When Elephants Were Young. It's a look at the issues threatening the endangered mammals — which some experts say could be extinct in 30 years — and the bond between an elephant and its handler in Thailand.

Not for family consumption: Raunchy animated tale Sausage Party features Brenda the hot dog bun (Kristen Wiig), her boyfriend Frank (Seth Rogen), and other foods.

SAUSAGE PARTY

Food porn you won't see on the Food Network

Richard Crouse
For Metro Canada

Hot on the heels of family-friendly cartoons like Zootopia, The Secret Life of Pets and Finding Dory comes an animated movie that definitely isn't for the whole family… unless it's the Manson Family.

The high concept of Seth Rogen's NSFW Sausage Party was, I think, best summed up by twitter user @ByChrisSmith who wrote, "So that Sausage Party trailer... Toy Story for food with swears?"

It's the kind of food porn you won't see on the Food Network. "We started to think 'What if food had feelings?' said Rogen after a sneak preview at the South By Southwest Film Festival. "That really is what inspired the whole idea."

The story begins at a supermarket called Shopwell's. Frank the Sausage (voice of Rogen), his hot dog bun girlfriend Brenda (Kristen Wiig) and all the other foods — including Mr. Grits (Craig Robinson), a tomato (Paul Rudd) and Teresa the Taco (Salma Hayek) — live in hope that one day a customer will choose them. When they find out what happens after the customer takes them home, however, they fight to avoid their fate.

R-rated and raunchy, Rogen says he showed an early cut to Borat star Sacha Baron Cohen. "Sausage Party appalled him in some ways," said Rogen, adding that Cohen, cinema's Prince of Provocation, called it "the craziest thing I've ever seen in my life."

Someone who might not have been surprised by Sausage Party is Ralph Bakshi, a legendary animator who once said, "You know it's working if you're making movies you don't want your mother to see."

Bakshi began his career working for Terrytoons, home to cartoon characters like Heckle and Jeckle and Mighty Mouse but left TV to make first animated film to receive an X-rating from the MPAA. Loosely based on a character created by cartoonist Robert Crumb, who later disavowed the film, 1972's Fritz the Cat is a trippy counterculture flick about a streetwise feline who smokes dope and has run-ins with the Hell's Angels and the Black Panthers. Extremely controversial — New York Times critic Vincent Canby wrote, "(There's) something to offend just about everyone" — it became the first independent animated film to gross more than $100 million at the box office.

More adult animation came with the R-rated Heavy Metal. An anthology made up of eight stories bound together by an intergalactic traveller described as the sum of all evil.

Both Fritz the Cat and Heavy Metal were successful enough to spawn sequels that tried, and failed, to recapture the success of the originals.

When asked if there might be a sequel to Sausage Party, Rogen said, "That would be dope. All we do are franchises now."

Touring Taiwan on two wheels

ADVENTURE

Stunning rides for every ability level

Mark Stachiew
For Metro Canada

From taking in tourist sites to taking on Taroko Gorge, Taiwan has a great bike ride for nearly everyone. ALL PHOTOS MARK STACHIEW/FOR METRO

Taiwan might be famous for making cheap electronics, but it also happens to be home to Giant, the world's largest bicycle company.

It exports millions of bicycles to every corner of the world each year, but also supplies a thriving local market in a land that is in love with the two-wheel ride.

Thus, visitors to Taiwan can easily explore the country on bike by riding a sprawling network of dedicated paths that caters to cyclists of all abilities. Numerous local operators offer tours that include bike rentals and support vans as well as restaurant and accommodation options that allow tourists to go at their own pace.

Here are some popular cycling itineraries, rated by difficulty, for people interested in discovering this green and pleasant sub-tropical island:

Easy

Take a U-bike in Taipei. Taiwan's capital has an extensive bicycle-sharing network that is a breeze to use. Ride out to Taipei 101 for the best views of the city from the top of an architectural marvel that was for a brief time the tallest building in the world. Check out the changing of the guard ceremony at the magnificent Chiang Kai-shek Memorial Hall, or simply meander to any corner of the city that catches your fancy. Unlike some Asian cities, Taipei's traffic is surprisingly civilized and riding a bike there doesn't feel like a death wish.

Ride around Sun Moon Lake. Taiwan's largest lake is one of its most scenic. Sacred to the Thao tribe, one of Taiwan's indigenous peoples, the lake has long been a popular resort area for Taiwanese. Cyclists can discover the lake's beauty with a 30-kilometre circumnavigation that brings them past magnificent temples and lush forests filled with monkeys, birds and noisy insects.

Medium

Follow the coastal route. Taiwan's Coastal Mountain Range plunges steeply toward the sea.
The green sides of the mountains are covered with dense, tropical foliage and their tops are shrouded in low clouds. Cyclists along this route stick close to the water's edge that is lined with craggy rocks and grey sand. It is part of Cycling Route #1, a path that circles the entire island of Taiwan and is a popular goal for Taiwanese cyclists that can be completed in about two weeks.

Discover the Huatang Valley
This inland route lies in a valley between two mountain ranges. Most of the ride is flat, but there are some long, gradual hills that can be tiring over long distances, but riders are rewarded when they go downhill. Much of the route rides past a quilted landscape of rice paddies. They are beautifully green most of the year and turn to gold come harvest time.

Difficult

Challenge the King of the Mountain. Every October, cyclists from around the world compete in Taiwan's most challenging cycling event, the King of the Mountain. Cyclists ride a stunningly scenic 105-kilometre route of switchbacks and hairpin curves that take them from sea level to 3,275 metres, high in the thin air of the mountains of the country's beautiful Taroko National Park.

RIO in brief

Police vehicle sprayed with bullets, officer hit

Pervasive violence is an everyday part of Rio, and a police officer was hospitalized after getting shot in the head when he and two others got lost near a slum.

The officers from Brazil's national security force who were sent to Rio for the Olympics relied on a GPS device to navigate unfamiliar streets Wednesday afternoon, but they took a wrong turn off a highway leading to Rio's international airport. Their truck was sprayed with bullets, and officer Helio Vieira was shot.

Venus still in the hunt for her fifth gold medal

Venus Williams' Rio Olympics is still going — just barely.

Upset in the first round in singles and doubles while battling a virus, the four-time gold medallist was a late entrant into mixed doubles. She and American teammate Rajeev Ram faced two match points Thursday and saved both in rallying from a set down for a 6-7 (4), 7-6 (3), 10-8 tiebreak win over Kiki Bertens and Jean-Julien Rojer of the Netherlands.

The U.S. duo moves on to Friday's quarter-finals.

Teenager adds fourth medal with stunning tied triumph

Teen swimming sensation Penny Oleksiak tied for gold in the women's 100-metre freestyle on Thursday at the Rio Olympics.

The 16-year-old Toronto native finished in an Olympic record time of 52.70 seconds with American Simone Manuel. Sarah Sjostrom of Sweden captured bronze in 52.99 seconds.

The gold was won in the final quarter of the 100-metre sprint. Oleksiak pushed to a furious finish to touch the wall at the same time as Manuel.

Oleksiak, now the youngest ever Summer Games gold medalist for Canada, looked up in disbelief as her time and position flashed on the scoreboard in Rio.

The teenager becomes the first Canadian swimmer to win four medals in a single Summer Games. She had previously won two relay bronze medals and a silver in the 100-metre butterfly.

"Honestly, I don't think anything's changed other than having so much support from Canadians," Oleksiak told CBC in a post-race interview about how her life has turned upside down since the Olympics began. "I'm just looking forward to going home and seeing everyone."

It was the first time a Canadian woman competed in the 100-metre freestyle since Marion Lay finished fourth in Mexico City in 1968.

GOLF

DeLaet off to a strong start on the links

Canada's defence of its 112-year-old Olympic golf title is off to a strong start.

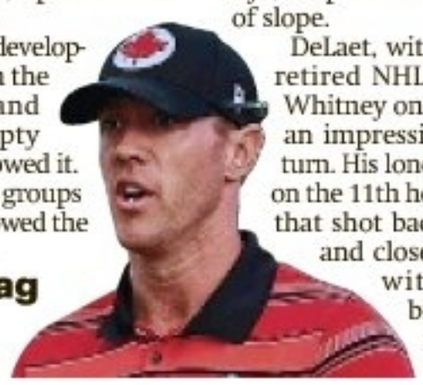
Graham DeLaet of Weyburn, Sask., fired four birdies over his first eight holes en route to a 5-under-par 66 and the clubhouse lead on Thursday until Australia's Marcus Fraser closed his round a short time later with a blistering 63. It was the first round of golf played at the Olympics since Canadian George S. Lyon won gold at the 1904 St. Louis Games.

Lyon played so long ago that he was born in Richmond, Canada West, the British colony that became Ontario after Confederation in 1867.

"It's pretty cool," DeLaet said. "First time in over 100 years and we're leading the charge here at the Olympics."

Henrik Stenson of Sweden also opened with a 66, and five players, including Germany's Alex Cejka, were right behind them at 67. David Hearn of Brantford, Ont., opened with a 2-over-par 73.

Golf is in the developmental stages in the host country and the rather empty grandstands showed it. There were still groups of fans who followed the golfers around the 7,128-yard course, which has wide fairways, deep bunkers and plenty of slope.



DeLaet, with friend and retired NHL player Ray Whitney on his bag, was an impressive 31 at the turn. His lone bogey came on the 11th hole but he got that shot back on No. 13 and closed his round with another birdie.

Jays hoping for joy of six

MLB

GM backing his rotation plan but Sanchez is still a concern

As counterintuitive as it seems, Blue Jays general manager Ross Atkins believes that the longer the team keeps going with a six-man rotation, that things are going well.

He feels there are factors that would end the six-man experiment and none of them are good, so if the Jays are still using six starting pitchers into September, it means they will likely have survived the dog days of August and will be in the American League East and American League playoff mix.

"We see it as a positive, we really do, at this time of the year," Atkins said

"The reason that the five-man versus six-man rotation gets a lot of attention is because it's not typical. That's fair and that's why we walked through all of our alternatives. But as we looked at the rotations and looked at how it would impact each starter and then thought about our bullpen, thought about the optionable relievers, we felt like we had enough (bullpen) depth and enough flexibility to adjust when we had to adjust. If we don't have to adjust, that would be a very good outcome, because that would mean that everyone was performing and healthy."

Of course the big question is why, after being involved in trade deadline discussions for 19 starting pitchers (his own estimate) and after obtaining a workhorse, Francisco Liriano from the Pirates, and after insisting Aaron Sanchez's transition to the 'pen would begin, why did they changed their mind? Is it because the trade deadline was too early and they felt Sanchez still had starting bullets left?

"We were also in on well over 20 relievers," Atkins countered. "We were looking to acquire pitching. It had to be on the major-league team. We were looking to build depth in pitching.

"It was an opportunity that we felt good about that added depth. It's really hard to say what will transpire with the rotation. I think the players will dictate that."

> It wasn't that we have to have a starter. It was how do we make our team deeper?
> Ross Atkins

The problem with believing the six-man rotation will solve the problem of excess Sanchez innings is that it won't really, especially if the Jays go deep into October. If manager John Gibbons continues to roll through the rotation of six guys, Sanchez would still log seven more starts.

Given his average, he'd accumulate 49 more innings, adding up to 194 in the regular season. Then if they went to the World Series, that would be six more Sanchez starts, giving him 235-240 innings.

"We'll be creative there, it's not just off-days, but potentially skipping starts," Atkins said. "There's a lot of things we can do. Really it came down to, there was more rationale pointing towards doing (a six-man) then there was rationale pointing to just do what everyone else has always done."

There was an early belief that — with the arrival of president Mark Shapiro and his hand-picked, inexperienced GM — the plan was to blow up the roster, cut back on payroll and rebuild the farm. But at this stage, Atkins insists that he sees the window of opportunity to win for this group to include next year and hopefully beyond. The fan support at Rogers Centre and TV ratings tell him that they owe it to the people that have brought them to this point. That's encouraging.

"It's a beautiful thing, it's why we do it," Atkins said. "I can only imagine what other teams are thinking when they come into this environment and think, 'Wow, that's special.' It really is a testament to the things that have been done well, before I was here. I'm really honoured to be a part of it."

Trumbo slam brings O's closer to AL East lead

Mark Trumbo hit a grand slam for his major league-leading 32nd homer and drove in five runs as the Baltimore Orioles beat the Oakland Athletics 9-6 Thursday to avoid a four-game sweep.

The Orioles had been shut out for 17 straight innings and lost their lead in the AL East following three consecutive one-run losses before Trumbo sparked them.

Baltimore is now 1/2 a game behind the Blue Jays atop the AL East.

An effective Matt Nichols has led Winnipeg to consecutive wins for the first time in more than two years but the Blue Bombers' ball-hawking defence hasn't gone unnoticed.

The unit has forced seven turnovers (three interceptions, three fumbles, one on downs) over that span, including six in last week's 37-11 home win over Hamilton. Predictably, Toronto starting quarterback Logan Kilgore believes ball protection and making smart decisions will be crucial when the Argonauts host the Bombers on Friday night at BMO Field.

"Their ability to create turnovers drives their team," said Kilgore, who'll make his second career CFL start. "If you look at the last two weeks they got two good victories and forced turnovers in both.

"We've got to protect the football, we feel that every week ... but particularly in this game and convert opportunities when we get the chance."

Nichols has completed 49 of 64 passes for 550 yards and three TDs with no interceptions since replacing incumbent Drew Willy under centre. More importantly, Winnipeg (3-4) hasn't turned the ball over in its last two contests.

"Our mindset has changed," Nichols said. "We're starting to have a lot more belief in ourselves that we're supposed to go out and win games."

Not long ago, many Winnipeg football fans were calling for head coach Mike O'Shea's ouster. Now his biggest challenge is ensuring the Bombers don't get complacent.

"I like the interaction the players have with each other and how they're working together on the field is looking really good," he said. "But you also have to guard against the idea of being satisfied.

"You can't ever be satisfied."

But O'Shea is still under the gun in Winnipeg considering he's missed the playoffs the last two years and is in the final year of his contract.

Argos coach Scott Milanovich feels O'Shea, who served as Toronto's special-teams coordinator before joining the Bombers, has his best chance now to succeed in Manitoba.

"He's a good football coach," Milanovich said. "People need to give him time to do this thing and I have faith he'll do a great job."

Toronto (4-2) is coming off a bye week following its 23-20 road win over Ottawa on July 31. The Argos were 3-0 following the bye last year and are 7-1 since 2012. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Ranieri adopting an alien approach

Leicester manager Claudio Ranieri believes it will be "impossible" for his team to retain the English Premier League title, saying Thursday it's more likely that "ET comes to Piccadilly Circus."

The team from central England produced one of the greatest-ever underdog stories in sports by winning the league, at pre-season odds of 5,000-1.

Speaking ahead of the first game of Leicester's title defence this weekend, Ranieri said the British bookmakers' odds on his team this season should be "6,000-1."

Claudio Ranieri GETTY IMAGES

"It's more difficult than last season — it's easier that ET comes to Piccadilly Circus," the Italian coach said. "All the world is curious what will happen with Leicester.

"Of course, the big teams are ready to fight for the title, we are ready to defend our title, but we know it is a difficult gap. Last season we made something unbelievable." THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

IN BRIEF

Pochettino not panicking
Tottenham manager Mauricio Pochettino says the heavy off-season spending by some of his team's rivals for the Premier League title is a sign of desperation. "When you spend a lot of money, it's because you are worried about your squad," he said. "I'm very happy with my players. I'm very quiet and relaxed." THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Swans smash transfer mark
Swansea has become the latest Premier League club to break its transfer record this off-season, signing striker Borja Baston from Atletico Madrid for $20 million. The 23-year-old Baston, who has been capped by Spain at youth level, is the second Spanish striker to join Swansea this week after Fernando Llorente. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RECIPE Blueberry Sweet Potato Waffles

Ceri Marsh & Laura Keogh
For Metro Canada

It seems an unlikely pairing but once you get sweet potato and blueberries together they're like peanut butter and jelly, but better. Well, it is. They're in a waffle, for heaven's sake.

Ready in 30 minutes
Prep time:10 minutes
Makes 4 large waffles

Ingredients
- 2 cups spelt flour
- 2 tsp baking powder
- 1/4 tsp salt
- pinch of allspice
- 1 1/3 cups milk
- 2 eggs
- 2 eggs
- 2 Tbsp oil
- 1 Tbsp maple syrup
- 1/4 cup sweet potato puree
- 1/4 cup fresh blueberries

Directions

1. Preheat your waffle iron.

2. In a large mixing bowl, whisk flour, baking powder, salt and allspice. Stir in 2/3 cup milk, eggs, oil and maple syrup. Mix in sweet potato and then fold in the blueberries.

3. Coat waffle iron with oil or nonstick spray; repeat if necessary between batches. Follow the waffle iron's instructions for cooking.

IT'S ALL IN THE STARS Your daily horoscope by Francis Drake

Aries March 21 - April 20
Sudden changes to travel plans are likely. You might meet someone from far away or be surprised to encounter someone from another culture or a different country. Likewise, legal decisions will be unexpected.

Taurus April 21 - May 21
Check your bank account for something unexpected: shared property, taxes, debt, inheritances and wills. Make sure you know what's happening.

Gemini May 22 - June 21
A partner or close friend might throw you for a loop today by doing something you least expect. Someone might demand more freedom in the relationship.

Cancer June 22 - July 23
Interruptions to your work are likely. (Computer crashes, equipment breakdowns, staff shortages and canceled meetings are just some examples.) Allow extra time to cope with this.

Leo July 24 - Aug. 23
A surprise invitation to a vacation or a social event might come your way today. Children might be the source of a surprise. Ditto for sports.

Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
Something to do with your home routine will change today. Perhaps small appliances break down or minor breakages will occur. Perhaps unexpected company arrives.

Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
Your mind is racing today, because it's full of ideas that you want to share with others — especially siblings, relatives and daily contacts. It's easy to think out

Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
Today you might find money; you might lose money; you might lose an item or you might find something that was lost. Count your change and check your bills.

Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
You feel independent and confident today. You also feel ambitious, which is why you might do something different or spontaneously take a new direction.

Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
An unexpected secret might come out today because something related to a hidden matter will surprise you. Or you might make a breakthrough in a research project.

Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
You love characters! Today is a classic type of day to meet someone who is unusual and different. However, someone you already know might amaze you in a weird way.

Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
You might be surprised or caught off guard when talking to parents and bosses today. Someone might suggest something that ultimately gives you more freedom.
